

Step 1: Identify the Cycle

Think about a recent conflict or emotionally charged interaction with your partner (or another close person). What happened?

Brief Description of the Situation:

Steh	2: Name Your Role in the Cycle
In thi	s dynamic, which role do you tend to take?
_	ursuer – I try to reach out, fix, talk, confront, demand, or get a response. Ithdrawer – I shut down, avoid, minimize, go quiet, or try to stay out of conflict
Desc	ribe what you typically do when things feel tense or disconnected:
Step	3: What Are You Feeling?
Wher	you're in this pattern, what emotions come up for you?
•	□Angry
•	□ Hurt
•	□Anxious
•	□Sad
•	□Rejected
•	□ Afraid
•	□Numb
•	□ Overwhelmed
•	□ Other:
What	are the deeper emotions underneath your first reaction?

Step 4: What Are You Really Needing?

Even when you're reacting in a protective way (pursuing or withdrawing), there's usually a deeper emotional need underneath.
What do you long for from your partner (or other person) in this moment?
(e.g., "To know I matter," "To feel safe," "To be reassured," "To feel accepted")
Step 5: What Do You Notice About the Pattern?
What does your partner typically do when you pursue/withdraw?
 How do your actions and their actions feed into the cycle?
Example: "When I raise my voice, they shut down. Then I feel even more alone, so I push harder."
Step 6: Breaking the Cycle – New Moves
1. What could you say to your partner that communicates your deeper emotion or need?
Example: "I get loud because I feel scared you're pulling away."
2. What would help you feel safe enough to respond differently?
Ideas for a new way to respond:
Reflection
How would your relationship feel different if you both could step out of this pattern and connect from a place of vulnerability?
